

Black's Back Again

The black stallion just keeps coming back to his home turf. This is the second time the Black Stallion returned to the BLM land just north of Sundance Mesa. Is he laughing at us?

He was released to the preserve and stayed a few months but found a hole in the fence at the gravel mine between the preserve and “home” and returned. While most of the Sundance community were happy to see him back putting out water troughs and hay commenting on the neighborhood web exchange;

“So happy to see horses again.” I miss seeing our horses behind my home”. I’ve been watching the Black Stallion since he returned. Can he stay”?

The BLM said he had to go back. So we corralled him but not before the horse haters showed up demanding that the BLM lands were for people not horses. Telling the Placitas WILD volunteers working on the corral that he be removed before he damaged the 3,100 acres he was roaming all by himself.

We took him back and this time he returned within a week. The fence has not been repaired. He has a slight limp that the vet said it looked like a minor injury that should clear up soon and the BLM has been cooperative. He is scheduled to be corralled the first week in May and returned as soon as the pueblo fence is secure.
